

Comments on “Restoring Internet Freedom” proposal

Currently internet service providers (ISPs) are treated like public utilities, or common carriers, which is the way it should be--so many people NEED the internet for their jobs! So, as of right now, ISPs must treat all internet content the same. They cannot create “fast lanes”, charging more money for faster content delivery. Reversing net neutrality rules would make it harder for everyone to access certain internet content. Only big businesses would be in a position to pay more money for easier access. It places small companies at a serious competitive disadvantage. Small companies are the backbone of our economy. We need to make it EASIER for them to succeed, not HARDER. Small companies are our future!

For this reason I am opposed to the so-called “Restoring Internet Freedom” proposal.
